

JUDGES ARE WORKING ON FAIR EXHIBITS

Large Crowd Attends Opening Of South Mountain Fair On Tuesday.
CLOSES SATURDAY

With the various departments overflowing with exhibits of high quality, judges found their hands full when it came to awarding prizes at the South Mountain fair at Arendtsville union park today. Judging began this morning with competent officials from State College making the awards.

The fifth annual fair was formally opened at 6 o'clock, Tuesday evening, but long before that hour crowds began arriving at the grove, and attendance was reported as "very good."

Judges in the horticultural department said the display of fruit surpasses any they have seen at any previous fair this fall, and they complimented Adams county peach and apple growers upon the high quality of their displays.

The cattle, poultry, hog and home economic exhibits are among the finest ever brought together at a South Mountain fair, and judges had difficulty in picking winners of first prizes.

Large Flower Display
This display of flowers is largest and more colorful than ever before. Some of the first prizes announced in this department today were won by Gettysburg growers. Mrs. Howard Hartzell won first prize for the largest dahlia, and Mrs. Luther I. Sachs won first prize for the best mixed basket of dahlias, with second prize in that class going to Mrs. Hartzell.

The Lillian St. Leon eight-act circus gave its first performance Tuesday evening and lived up to the advance notice that it was a "hum-dinger." The circus features educated and well-trained horses and dogs, bucking mules and fancy riders.

Boys' Band Plays
The circus acts consumed an hour and a half in their presentation, and many favorable comments from patrons were heard. The circus performs twice daily. The Gettysburg Boys' band plays on the grounds all day, and the young musicians have already made a name for themselves among the upper counties, who greet each number with shouts of applause.

The commercial display of farm and household necessities, automobiles, radios, wearing apparel and whatnot are in greater number than ever before at the fair. Another year will probably see the erection of another large building to house all such exhibits.

STIFF DRILL FOR MAROONS

Coach Martin Sends High Warriors Through First Heavy Session.

Practice for the maroon and white gridlers has gradually assumed a more business like aspect. On Tuesday night the Martinmen were given their first taste of real football in the form of "dummy" practice.

When Coach Martin notified his boys to report for practice with shoulder pads the little bullets at once realized they would get their first real chance to show their worth.

First the linemen were given a drill on "taking out" a man. At the other side of the field the backfield aspirants were getting a more realistic drill. Pulling down a man running with the ball featured in this workout. Afterwards the entire squad was sent through a short tackling practice in the sawdust pit. The session lasted two hours.

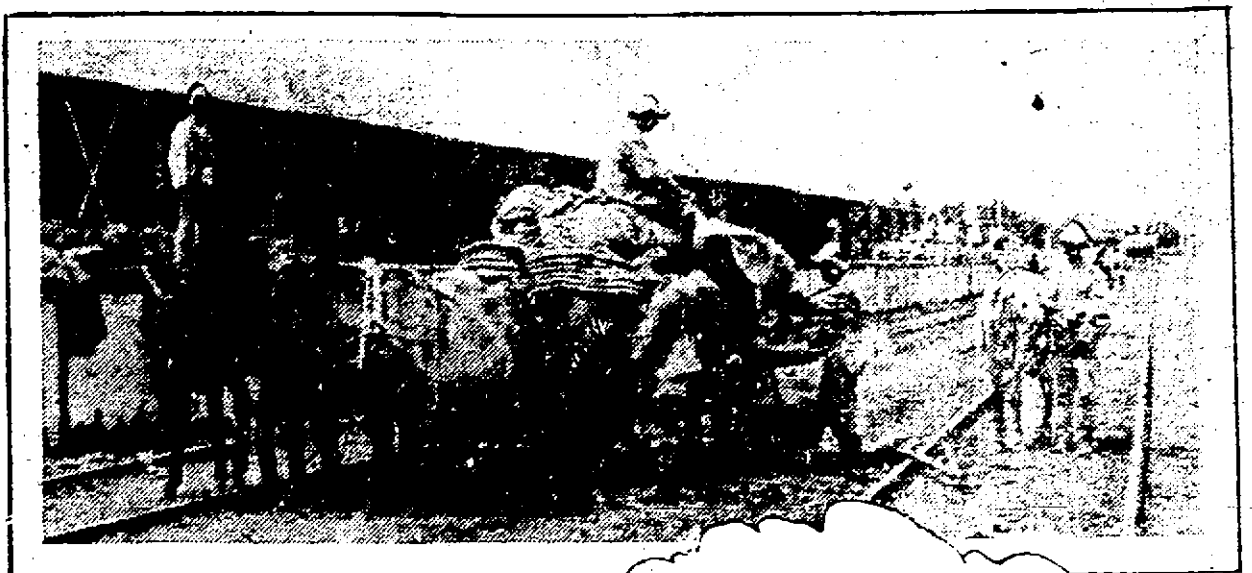

Seeks Fullback
In an effort to get a heavy man into the backfield, Coach Martin has taken George Pitzer from his place at guard to a ball carrier's position. The high school mentor intends to experiment with Pitzer in the hope of developing a fullback. Pitzer weighs 175 pounds and is anxious to make good in the backfield. If Martin can develop him into a capable back, many will see the high school coach will vanish.

The punting department seems to be well taken care of this year. George Bushman, half-back, will probably do the better part of the kicking for the locals. Bushman is a veteran at this, doing most of the kicking last season in fine style. Ivan Kitzmiller is also booting the ball in commendable fashion and will draw some of this work.

SAYS HE LOST CASH IN PRISON

International Gambler Lays Blame On California Prison Officials.
Sacramento, Cal., Sept. 11 (AP).—An alleged plot to kill Albert Sichofsky in Folsom Prison, for his money, was related here by James J. Smith, former warden of the prison, as the newest angle of the count's startling assertions that $35,000 belonging to him disappeared after he was arrested in California on bunco charges.

New York, Sept. 11 (AP).—Count Albert Sichofsky, Polish adventurer, Tuesday obtained a writ of habeas corpus in an effort to gain release from Ellis Island, where he is held for deportation. He wants to go back to California and prosecute claims for more than $200,000 of which he charges he was deprived while under investigation and in prison there for the "last nine years."

In support of his application for a writ, the count through his attorney made sensational charges against the District Attorney's and Sheriff's offices in Los Angeles and against one whom he described as "a Mr. Gannon, warden of Folsom Prison."

Claims Gammon Got $12,680
The count charges that on Gannon's advice, while in Folsom Prison, he paid out $12,680, which he was informed was the verdict and costs in a civil action against him, and that later he found out that $12,680 of it went to Gannon.

Count Sichofsky, according to his attorney, knew of the plaintiff in the civil action only at "a Mr. Emanuel" and never found out what the suit was all about or why it was brought against him.

The count also, his attorney said, charges that after a Sacramento newspaperman had interested himself on his behalf, he was spirited out of Folsom Prison several days before his sentence expired last June, taken in an automobile under guard and communicated to San Francisco, and placed aboard a train for Ellis Island.

Count Sichofsky, an internationally-known gambler regarded by the United States Labor Department as one of the most dangerous criminals who ever entered this country, according to his attorney, further charges that the District Attorney's office in Los Angeles owes him $14,021.22.

Forty-four years ago the veterans encamped here, living under canvas on the eastern promenade.

DEMOCRATS ON INCREASE HERE

Outnumber Republicans By 748 According To Survey By C. F. Palmer.

Registered Democratic voters of Adams county have a majority of 748 over declared Republicans, according to figures compiled by C. F. Palmer, clerk to the county commissioners. The totals were compiled by Mr. Palmer from the registration books recently returned to his office by the registry assessors of the county.

According to Mr. Palmer, 4795 Democratic men and 4092 Democratic women, a total of 8887, are registered in the county, as compared with 4388 Republican men and 3751 Republican women, a total of 8139.

Republicans take hope in electing their candidates in November, however, from the fact that 2611 men and women in Adams county have not declared their political affiliation, although it is generally conceded that many of the 1794 undeclared men have Democratic leanings.

Death Baffles State Police

Harrisburg, Sept. 11 (AP).—The slaying of a young matron whose body was found last night in a corn field on her husband's farm today presented a mystery in which state police admitted they had few if any clues.

Mrs. Annie Horbach, 26, disappeared from her home on a farm near here yesterday. Alarmed by her absence her husband, James Horbach, and several neighbors set out to find her. Late last night they found the woman's body in a corn field with a wound, apparently inflicted by a knife, in the throat.

State police were today working both on murder and suicide theories.

Anxious that consideration of the tariff bill be delayed no longer than possible administration leaders were striving to postpone the Vare issue which was brought up by Senator Norris, Republican of Nebraska, with the introduction of a resolution barring the Philadelphian from the Senate. The measure automatically took precedent.

Pending was a motion by Senator Watson, majority leader, under which consideration of the Vare case would be deferred until after the Senate meets in regular session in December. In the event of its defeat administration leaders hoped to obtain an agreement postponing a vote on the Norris resolution until next week so that the Senate elections committee can report on the contest of William B. Wilson, Vare's Democratic opponent in the election of 1926.

DEATH
HARTMAN. In Philadelphia, September 10, Howard J. Hartman, aged 66 years.

Relatives and friends are invited to funeral service at the home of his son, John, Hanover street, Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

H. J. HARTMAN, EX-SHERIFF OF ADAMS, EXPIRES

Death Claims Local Man After Brief Illness In Philly Hospital.

FUNERAL FRIDAY

Howard J. Hartman, Hanover street, sheriff of Adams county from 1916 to 1920, died at 2:46 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, in Jefferson hospital, Philadelphia, where he was a patient for ten days. Death was attributed to heart trouble from which Mr. Hartman suffered for some time. He was 66 years of age.

The former sheriff went to Philadelphia three weeks ago to visit Mrs. Hartman, who has been residing there for more than five years. While in the city, Mr. Hartman went to Jefferson hospital for treatment. The end was sudden and unexpected.

After serving Adams county as its sheriff during the war period, Mr. Hartman was succeeded in the office by his son, John W. Hartman, Hanover street, a veteran of the world war. The younger Hartman's term expired in 1924.

Born in County
The elder Hartman was born in Mt. Joy township, a son of the late John and Anna Hartman. He farmed in Mt. Joy township later acquiring the old Squire Durban place on which he lived a number of years. Mr. Hartman retired from farming in 1902 when he moved to Gettysburg.

After coming here he worked for the International harvester company as an erector and for many years went to Canada each summer for that concern.

Always a Republican and an active worker in the party Mr. Hartman was elected sheriff of Adams county in the fall of 1915, defeating the late John C. Bollinger, of Union township.

Lived Retired
Sheriff Hartman was president of the Adams county draft board during the world war and in that capacity worked tirelessly filling Adams county's quota for the army. He supervised the enrollment of more than 2,400 men in the draft here. For his services, Mr. Hartman received an honorable discharge from the army.

Since completing his term as sheriff Mr. Hartman had been living retired at his home on Hanover street.

He was a member of St. James' Lutheran church.

The deceased is survived by his widow whose maiden name was Miss Sarah Elizabeth Wilson, of Mt. Joy township, and one son, John W. Hartman, Hanover street. Three sisters, Mrs. Reuben Fissel, Baltimore street; Mrs. Emory Weikert, Union township, and Mrs. Addison Newman, Two Taverns, also survive.

Funeral Friday
Funeral services Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the home of John W. Hartman, Hanover street, the Rev. Earl J. Bowman officiating. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

The body is expected to arrive in Gettysburg from Philadelphia, Thursday morning, and may be viewed at the Hartman home between 7 and 9 o'clock, Thursday evening.

Drought Hits State Crops, Report Shows

Harrisburg, Sept. 11 (AP).—The effect of the devastating hail laid upon Pennsylvania crops by the summer's drought was apparent today in a report issued by the federal-state crop reporting service showing that practically every crop declined during August to the lowest point in years and in some cases the lowest ever recorded.

Oats, peaches and pears were the only crops showing a gain over the August 1 forecast and this gain was slight.

Corn is at its second poorest mark and potatoes at the lowest since 1911. The condition of buckwheat is the poorest ever known.

Of the fruit which showed little change from the August report, peaches are in the best condition. The forecast is for 37,000 bushels. Grapes and pears are mostly undersized but of fair returns.

Strange Trespass Action Is Filed

Chambersburg, Sept. 11 (AP).—An action in trespass has been filed in the Franklin county court here against 12 residents of this section by attorneys for Aden Shank, formerly of Zullinger, near Waynesboro, and now of Salt Lake City. Attorneys refuse to reveal the cause or intent of the action but promised a statement in a few days.

The prominence of Shank in the removal of Salt Lake City has inspired rumors of a sensational nature which have spread throughout the eastern section of the state.

Col. W. J. Barden is mentioned as a possible choice for chief of army engineers to succeed General.

DEMOCRATS ON INCREASE HERE

Outnumber Republicans By 748 According To Survey By C. F. Palmer.

Registered Democratic voters of Adams county have a majority of 748 over declared Republicans, according to figures compiled by C. F. Palmer, clerk to the county commissioners. The totals were compiled by Mr. Palmer from the registration books recently returned to his office by the registry assessors of the county.

According to Mr. Palmer, 4795 Democratic men and 4092 Democratic women, a total of 8887, are registered in the county, as compared with 4388 Republican men and 3751 Republican women, a total of 8139.

Republicans take hope in electing their candidates in November, however, from the fact that 2611 men and women in Adams county have not declared their political affiliation, although it is generally conceded that many of the 1794 undeclared men have Democratic leanings.

The figures compiled by Mr. Palmer will be used in connection with next Tuesday's primary election in Adams county. Those voters who are undeclared will not be allowed to vote at the primary unless they declare their party affiliation.

Dr. and Mrs. Aberly entertained members of the faculty and their wives at a dinner at the Flora Dale tea room, Tuesday evening. The evening was spent in informal discussion of plans for the ensuing year at the seminary.

Hanover Couple Engaged To Wed

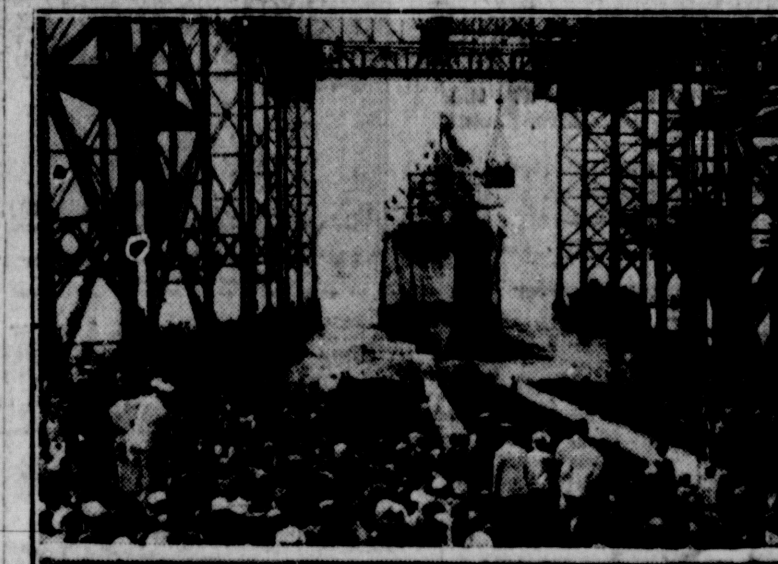

The engagement of Miss Julia Martha Trout, of Hanover, to Edward Grenier, Harrisburg, formerly of Hanover, was announced Tuesday evening by her mother, Mrs. N. A. Trout, at a birthday dinner and bridge party tendered Miss Trout by her mother, at their home in Hanover. Both are well known here.

The birthday cake, surmounted by 22 pink candles, occupied a nest in the center of the table surrounded by smilax, with runners to each corner of the table. At each place was placed a favor in the form of a pink sweetheart rose, bearing upon its stem a blue bird, which announced the truth of "Judy" and "Cap" by a message which it bore in its mouth.

Miss Trout is a popular member of the younger social set. Mr. Grenier, son of Mrs. D. Grenier, New York city, is sports editor of The Evening News, Harrisburg, and a former editor of The Hanover Record-Herald. No date for their wedding has been set. "Judy" received a number of handsome presents from her chums present at the party.

Biglerville "Golfers" Conquer G-burg 44 to 20

Biglerville came, pitched and conquered in the first inter-town horseshoe pitching contest in which the newly-organized Gettysburg club of "barnyard golfers" participated. The contest was held in the presence of a large gallery of spectators on the club's new courts in the rear of Hess' antique shop, Baltimore street, Tuesday evening. The score was 44 to 20.

In arranging for the contests, the Gettysburg club officials allowed Biglerville to draw from various other communities in the upper end of Adams county for pitching talent, and the best tossers from Benderville, Arendtsville, Idaville and elsewhere were recruited by the visitors.

Many See Battle
Among the thirty-two players on both teams were six ministers, and three other ministers and a priest were counted in the crowd of more than 150 spectators who perched on the fence around the lot and occupied other vantage points.

The pastors who witnessed the playing were the Rev. Father Mark Stock, the Rev. L. B. Hafer, the Rev. L. K. Young and the Rev. F. L. Stine. A number of women were in the crowd.

Two of the Gettysburg club's best pitchers, Joseph Hess and Raymond Stettler, were unable to participate in the contest, and the local devotees of the game promise Biglerville closer competition when they meet in a return match.

On the visiting team were the Rev. C. M. Ankerbrand, Kermit Gulden, Lawrence Lupp, Dale Miller, Nert Thomas, Wilmer Lupp, the Rev. George B. Ely, the Rev. O. D. Coble, James Reed, Reuben Roth, Taylor Crist, Alfred Delp, the Rev. Ira Trostel, Daniel Bucher, Glenn Thomas and Ivan Gulden.

Vare Issue Is Before Senate

Washington, Sept. 11 (AP).—The long standing question of seating William B. Vare as senator from Pennsylvania today shunted to one side the tariff as the official subject of Senate debate.

Anxious that consideration of the tariff bill be delayed no longer than possible, administration leaders were striving to postpone the Vare issue which was brought up by Senator Norris, Republican, of Nebraska, with the introduction of a resolution barring the Philadelphian from the Senate. The measure automatically took precedent.

Pending was a motion by Senator Watson, majority leader, under which consideration of the Vare case would be deferred until after the Senate meets in regular session in December. In the event of its defeat administration leaders hoped to obtain an agreement postponing a vote on the Norris resolution until next week so that the Senate elections committee can report on the contest of William B. Wilson, Vare's Democratic opponent in the election of 1926.

DEATH

HARTMAN—In Philadelphia, September 10, Howard J. Hartman, aged 66 years.

Relatives and friends are invited to funeral service at the home of his son, John, Hanover street, Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

Col. W. J. Barden is mentioned as a possible choice for chief of army engineers to succeed General

H. J. HARTMAN, EX-SHERIFF OF ADAMS, EXPIRES

Death Claims Local Man After Brief Illness In Philly Hospital.

FUNERAL FRIDAY

Howard J. Hartman, Hanover street, sheriff of Adams county from 1916 to 1920, died at 2:45 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, in Jefferson hospital, Philadelphia, where he was a patient for ten days. Death was attributed to heart trouble from which Mr. Hartman suffered for some time. He was 66 years of age.

The former sheriff went to Philadelphia three weeks ago to visit Mrs. Hartman, who has been residing there for more than five years. While in the city, Mr. Hartman went to Jefferson hospital for treatment. The end was sudden and unexpected.

After serving Adams county as its sheriff during the war period, Mr. Hartman was succeeded in the office by his son, John W. Hartman, Hanover street, a veteran of the world war. The younger Hartman's term expired in 1924.

Born in County
The elder Hartman was born in Mt. Joy township, a son of the late John and Annie Hartman. He farmed in Adams county, later acquiring the old Squire Durbin place on which he lived a number of years. Mr. Hartman retired from farming in 1902 when he moved to Gettysburg.

After coming here he worked for the International harvester company as an erector and for many years went to Canada each summer for that concern. Always a Republican and an active worker in the party, Mr. Hartman was elected sheriff of Adams county in the fall of 1915, defeating the late John C. Bollinger, of Union township.

Sheriff Hartman was president of the Adams county draft board during the world war and in that capacity worked tirelessly filling Adams county's quota for the army. He supervised the enrollment of more than 2,400 men in the draft here. For his services, Mr. Hartman received an honorable discharge from the army.

Since completing his term as sheriff Mr. Hartman had been living retired at his home on Hanover street.

He was a member of St. James' Lutheran church.

The deceased is survived by his widow whose maiden name was Miss Sarah Elizabeth Wilson, of Mt. Joy township, and one son, John W. Hartman, Hanover street. Three sisters, Mrs. Reuben Fissel, Baltimore street; Mrs. Emory Weikert, Union township, and Mrs. Addison Newman, Two Taverns, also survive.

Funeral Friday
Funeral services Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the home of John W. Hartman, Hanover street, the Rev. Earl J. Bowman officiating. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

The body is expected to arrive in Gettysburg from Philadelphia, Thursday morning, and may be viewed at the Hartman home between 7 and 9 o'clock, Thursday evening.

Drought Hits State Crops, Report Shows

Harrisburg, Sept. 11 (AP).—The effect of the devastating hand laid upon Pennsylvania crops by the summer's drought was apparent today in a report issued by the federal-state crop reporting service showing that practically every crop declined during August to the lowest point in years and in some cases the lowest ever recorded.

Oats, peaches and pears were the only crops showing a gain over the August 1 forecast and this gain was slight.

Corn is at its second poorest mark and potatoes at the lowest since 1911. The condition of buckwheat is the poorest ever known. Of the fruit which showed little change from the August report, peaches are in the best condition. The forecast is for 137,000 bushels. Grapes and pears are most seriously undersized but of fair returns.

Strange Trespass Action Is Filed

Chambersburg, Sept. 11 (AP).—An action in trespass has been filed in the Franklin county court here against 12 residents of this section by attorneys for Aden Shank, formerly of Zullinger, near Waynesboro, and now of Salt Lake City. Attorneys refuse to reveal the cause or intent of the action but promised a statement in a few days.

The prominence of Shank in the Waynesboro community until his removal to Salt Lake City has inspired rumors of a sensational nature which have spread throughout the eastern section of the state.

HANOVER CIGAR MAKER GIVES STRONG ENDORSEMENT

Declares Natex ended ailments that had been bothering him
For years. Samples Free.

"This new Natex which is being sold by the special laboratory representative at Murphy's Cut Rate Store certainly does the work and I for one am mighty glad to tell how it helped me," declares Mr. Edward J. Noble, Route 2, Hanover,
Pa. In a written statement Mr.
Noble is a cigar maker in the employ of Powell & Goldstein and has hosts of friends thru-out this section.
"For years," continues Mr. Noble,
"I have been complaining of various ailments which have caused me to lose about 20 pounds in weight. I believe much of my trouble was due to constipation for I was compelled to take laxatives all the time. My stomach was also in bad shape. After meals my stomach would feel sore and burn and the gas which formed caused a crawling uncomfortable sensation made me very short of breath.
I slept very poorly at nights and in the mornings I got up with an awful taste in my mouth and often had severe headaches and felt
My limbs ached greatly from the knees down and I was losing all pep and strength.
"Natex seemed to be just 'the medicine that my system needed, and by the time I had been taking it for a month I was feeling like a different man. My bowels were as regular as the clock and my stomach was in such good condition that I was able to enjoy every meal.
I slept like a rock at nights and got up in the mornings feeling like a two-year old without the dizziness, headaches or bad taste in my mouth. Natex even ended the pains in my limbs and gave me new pep and ambition so that I can now truthfully say that I am feeling better than in years and can recommend it to others who may be suffering as I suffered."
The Natex Representative at Murphy's Cut Rate Store will gladly tell you more about Natex and how it works to wipe out sickness and pain even though ordinary medicines may have failed to bring relief. His advice is free.

Under Senate Fire

William B. Shearer, big navy ad vocate, whose alleged connections with large shipping interests during the Geneva arms limitation conference in 1926 and 1927 are being investigated by the senate committee.

"high dressmaking" gets for supplying it.

"Cramp your style? Of course, some of the new dresses will break out at the shoulder if you swing your arms in them," he volunteered.

There was a little note of pity in his voice for women who would want to do anything so unladylike as swing their arms in a dress from the house he represented.

"If," he said, "women want to take exercises, there are clothes for that purpose. The elegant dresses we design are meant to help women to act like ladies as well as dress like ladies. They make them sit up straight, cultivate reposeful gentle manners."

Then he explained very tactfully, but also very pointedly, that the post-war new-rich have a great deal to learn.

They have the wherewithal, and most of them, it seems, have the will, but what they lack is the savoir faire. They must learn from the "feel" of the clothes how they should look and what they should do in them. No danger of wearing an afternoon dress on the golf course if the sleeves burst out the minute you lift your arm for the tee-off.

But that is the lesser danger; the real one is that modern women will refuse to put on the clothes that cramp, having known the others, unless haute couture scares them back into clothes that force them to mind their step.

Wherefore these result the styles which automatically remind a "lady" not to lean on the lunch table with her elbows; not to put her hands above her head when she feels like a good stretch; and not to scratch behind her left shoulder with her right hand.

It's very simple for the nouveau riche who need such reminders and can afford them, and of course "high dressmaking" is not concerned with the penny pinchers.

The catch is that women who know how to behave without dressmakers' reminders come following after, like Mary's little lamb.

A Fish From the Seine

All the English-speaking peoples who know their Paris must be acquainted with the legend that no one has ever seen a fish caught in the Seine. The legend is false.

Just the other day M. Raymond Polther caught 19 fish out of 210 nibbles, with plenty of people looking on, and thus captured the 1929 championship of the Union of Parisian Fishermen. Mile. Marie Allais led the ladies by catching 11 fish.

It is still true, however, that the casual onlooker taking a promenade along the quais, sees scores of fishermen but never a fish.

Paris—There are times when you can't help eavesdropping, and one of them is in a Franco-American hairdressing shop when your next door neighbor is shouting above an electric drier on the other side of a curtain.

That was how I happened to hear about Lady Astor and her unexpected guest, the woman on the other side of the curtain.

"So after we'd finished our business she asked me where I was stopping and if I liked it."

"I told her 'no' but I only had five days more and I could stand a hotel that long no matter how bad."

"You'd do no such thing," she said; "you're coming home with me and stay there until you leave." So she simply insisted, I had a perfectly marvelous time and she was too sweet for words.

Harrisburg—Because of its ability in packing eggs, the mechanical man, a bureau of markets feature of the county fair exhibit arranged by the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, will finish the fair circuit with at least one blue ribbon.

At the Centre County Grange Fair the judges were so impressed with the robot's ability to handle eggs, that they awarded it a first prize.

The exhibit, designed to show correct methods of handling eggs, insect and disease control work and other activities of the department, has been a popular educational feature at a number of the county fairs this year, according to R. G. Bressler, deputy secretary of agriculture.

STOCK BROKER TALKS BEFORE EXCHANGE

York—Everett C. Brose, of H. L. Dougherty and company, stock brokers, gave an interesting talk Monday at the weekly meeting of the York exchange club, held in the dining room of the Hotel Penn. He addressed the Exchange on the subject, "The Investor and his Relation to the Stock Market."

Guests at the meeting were: O. H. Heckert, James Rhodes and H. G. Osman, all of York, and Morse Shreve, of Harrisburg. The meeting was in charge of Huston Schlosser and Ralph E. Fisher.

A program of piano solos, presented by Mrs. Ralph Stabler, and a song service, led by Roland M. Fulton, proved features of the day's program.

MUST MEET RULES ON PACKAGE APPLES

Harrisburg—Apple growers, shippers and dealers today were reminded by the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture of a state law requiring closed packages in which apples have been packed to carry the name and address of the packer, the variety of apple contained, the size of package, and the minimum size of fruit. The law also requires that the apples on the face of the package be a fair representation of the fruit in the balance of the container. The law is compulsory on all apples packed in closed packages within the commonwealth.

It was explained that this law does not require the compulsory use of the official standard grades, but all apple growers and packers are encouraged to use these grades as the basis for classifying their product. A larger percentage of the commercial apple crop will be packed according to these standard grades this year, than ever before, according to present indications.

Chapter 24

THROUGH THE KEYHOLE
SOMERFIELD'S discovery that Laxton was a detective was no great surprise to me.

"That's been worrying me ever since he came," I told Somerfield, "though my suspicions of the man's real profession were more recent. Then the people at the British Museum," Somerfield asked, "how

"Oh, that's quite easy. Laxton must have been on the watch for signs of Pell. As soon as Pell's name appeared in The Times, that day, when I said I was taking a ton had touch with something that was likely to happen."

"I've been wondering," Somerfield mused, "whether Laxton had any inkling of a possible shooting match and was trying to stop it. By the way, Grenofen, Laxton's not come out as a policeman yet. Why? He's still running the anti-quarian stunt."

"Is he? Seen him lately?" I asked.

"Yes," said Somerfield. "This afternoon I met him coming away from Newplace—in a dirty mess, earth all over his boots and clothes. Just taking leave of Marling and the cub. Said he'd been exploring with them. He walked along with me as far as the Lord Nelson. Fact is, Grenofen, that's what made me come out to see you."

"Did he say anything about me then?" I asked.

"Yes. Asked if you were home from Hollam Bay. Whether I'd met your cousin. Whether you were specially friendly with Fotherbury. He's got his eye on you, Grenofen. But that wasn't the most remarkable thing.

"He harked back to what happened in the library the afternoon Pell was killed. Then he asked me whether I saw you or anybody else take a book out of the shelves that afternoon."

SYNOPSIS: Veronica's clever scheme to account for the night's adventure does not elude Somerfield, who tells Tom Grenofen, the next day that he knows the truth. Further, he brings the information that Professor Laxton—in reality a Scotland Yard sleuth—is on Tom's trail and is particularly anxious to recover a certain ancient book stolen from the Fotherbury library on the day of Pell's murder. They ponder on the possible connection between Pell and the Seabrookes, the puzzling crime, Laxton's peculiar actions and Somerfield's latest discovery—that Pell's murderer could not have seen his victim through the keyhole, that the fatal bullet was intended for someone else in the room and the only man sitting in a position where he could have been seen through the keyhole, was—Parson Marling.

Chapter 25

COUSIN JOHN HIMSELF
IT was Marling who should have been shot, not Pell.

Somerfield had perceived the fact during Wayne's experiments with the keyhole. Looking through when the door was closed he could see the chest by the chimney corner where Marling sat and that was all. The probable truth dawned upon him in that moment.

"Strange," said I, "that Laxton should miss it."

"How do we know he does?" asked Somerfield. "I'm pretty sure

"Yes. I think it must have been Mr. Merryweather I met on Sunday. Rather tall man, exceedingly gentlemanly but rather indifferent to his appearance. Carrying a black bag."

I turned hot and felt as near fainting as ever in my life. I simply babbled.

"Where—how did you meet him?" I stammered.

"Oh, Sunday—on my way here. But it couldn't have been Cousin John. He didn't come till Tuesday."

"Why, of course! Must have been somebody else. Rotten luck for Mr. Merryweather, though, being ill all the time he was here, and then having to rush away. Had to go far?"

"To London," said I. "He went by the 9.40 train to Hollam Bay and caught the express."

Laxton smiled at me. It would be hard to describe all the meaning in that smile.

"You must have been back here almost as soon as I left. What time did you get home?"

The way of the liar—how stony! Somerfield came to my rescue.

"Haven't you got the news, professor?" said he. "On the way back from seeing his cousin off, he met Miss Seabroke."

Somerfield paused and Laxton looked at me.

The "keyhole murderer" intended to kill not Pell—but Marling!

drawing of the new fresco to the museum, Laxton or his superiors must have fixed up the trap with the museum people. Sunday night, when he took me down to the cloisters, policeman was written all over him."

"Of course, he was after Pell."

"It looked like that. But why? At least three people could tell that, Grenofen."

"Yes, I know," said I. "But I don't ask Veronica. I don't think would be fair to ask Mrs. Seabroke. And if I asked old Seabroke—well, you can easily guess—"

Somerfield nodded. "It's awkward," said he. "But, you know, it may have to be done. If the professor gets wise to what happened last night, he won't have any mighty compunctions about asking: Will he, now? Splitting away he man he was after for the murder of Pell! Have you realized it?"

My perception of reality was beguiled by Veronica.

Somerfield, looking on from outside, was able to precipitate the confusion a little. He had an analytical mind. All these disconnections, he said, had to be linked up somehow, and the only link he could see was Laxton.

Old Fotherbury's excavations had brought Pell down to Blackwater. Then, there was a get-away by a convict. The convict arrived at Blackwater, and on his heels—Laxton.

Pell was murdered in the act of revealing a ghost and when we look or the ghost we find—Laxton.

"Something to the background," said Somerfield, "between the Seabrookes, Pell and the convict. Something that even Laxton can't see, or he doesn't seem to have brought the Seabrookes into the picture yet. Therefore, whatever his knowledge, it begins later than the Seabrookes."

"No doubt about it," said I. "Laxton begins with some connection between Pell and the convict. The Seabrookes begin much further back. You remember that, immediately before, Laxton came to Blackwater, he'd been in Devonshire. You remember the unexplained absence of Veronica from London that Saturday, and Pell's absence at the same time. You read that a woman and a car as well as a male accomplice were concerned in the escape. Think of Sunday night: Veronica's strange return; my encounter in Woodcot Lane; Laxton's queer conduct; Laxton's knowledge that some fellow would be prowling about Newplace that night—it all shows Lax-

"He said Fotherbury had missed a book. It was in the library Friday. Tuesday, it couldn't be found. And Mr. Fotherbury wanted it badly."

"What book?" I asked.

"An old illuminated book, with a manuscript history of the Abbey. Laxton said he wouldn't be surprised if it was what had put Fotherbury on to his excavations."

"Nobody touched a book that day, so far as I remember."

"I didn't see anybody touch a book. But it's not the loss that interests me—it's the fact that Laxton's so curious about it."

"Yes, that's rather queer," I admitted.

"I'd give almost a dollar to know whether Pell was in the library on Friday and whether Marling knew he'd been there."

"Marling?"

"Well—think of Marling, a minute. Hated Pell. Why? Suspected him. Think of Marling. Then Monday afternoon—you couldn't miss Marling's face when Pell went for him. It was Marling who was going to see the ghost, if you remember. If Pell had taken the book, and Marling knew it, suppose the book contained the instructions for conjuring up the ghost, Grenofen?"

"I can't see how a book in Newplace library could have anything to do with conjuring a ghost out of a convict prison," said I.

"Did it ever occur to you that Pell might have been shot by accident?"

Somerfield put the question almost casually. It made me sit up.

"You mean—why, Somerfield, you can only mean one thing! That

"That the shot was meant for somebody else. In fact, it's perfectly clear, Grenofen. Did you look through the keyhole? A man who was going to fire through the keyhole couldn't possibly have aimed at Pell, who wasn't in the line of fire except for one instant."

"Of course! I hadn't thought of it. The man who fired the shot was blind at the time; he couldn't fire and see the target."

"Yes, and only one man could have been shot through the keyhole—the one who sat in the direct line of fire."

"And he was—"

Professor Laxton is dumbfounded at the arrival of the real Cousin John.

he doesn't. Grenofen. Have you noticed that though Wayne called in Scotland Yard we don't hear anything about the Scotland Yard men? There are two of 'em staying at the Lord Nelson. But Laxton's doing all the work; they're just camouflage. You said just now Laxton began late in the story. It's Marling can take him back. And I'm just guessing whether Marling wants to, I think not."

When we had emptied our quiver of facts and theories, we came to the inevitable question: "What about it?"

My mother came into the room. "I hear Professor Laxton at the door, Tom," she said, "asking for you."

I asked to have him sent in to us.

Laxton came in genial and hearty. "Ah, Mr. Grenofen," said he, "caught you this time. How do, Mr. Somerfield? Just came to know whether I might look over any sketches you have of the Newplace diggings. Mr. Grenofen, I'm curious about the state of the opening where the fresco was found right at the eastern end of the site. I'd like to see anything you've got of it before they dug out the slab of plaster."

I must have stared the surprise I felt as Laxton pattered on, for he laughed.

The sketch-book was, of course, quite useless. Laxton made a show of studying it, asked questions, dragged out the talk interminably as it seemed to me. Among the loose leaves was one with the unfinished drawing of the tourle on the river wall.

"I seem to recognize that," he remarked. "Isn't it that little building down by the river?"

Laxton began with this question a series of double meanings which made me hot and cold by turns. It was a perfectly diabolical conversation.

"I like this," he said. "It's got such a foreign look, don't you think?" It's a noble wall, isn't it? The old churchmen knew how to keep marauders off the premises, eh?"

Laxton looked round at me with an almost imperceptible wink as he said this. Then, turning away from the drawings, he apologized for his late call the night before.

"Sorry I wasn't home," said I. "Oh, I'm the man who ought to apologize. Seeing off your cousin, Mr. Merryweather, weren't you? I'd hoped to meet him again."

"Again?" I said, starting back.

"She'd seen something suspicious happening to Royce's boat. Mrs. Seabroke got out her husband's car and we drove down the coast road after the boat."

"You don't say!"

"And what's more," said Somerfield, "Andy Royle got a telephone message from them this morning from Silworth, and we ran down there and found them keeping guard over the boat."

"Extraordinary luck, you meeting Miss Seabroke, just in the nick of time!" Laxton paused. "On the way back from the station, too."

This remark flummoxed both of us. For the station was some little distance up the river beyond Blackwater Church, and it would have been truly astonishing if I had met Veronica anywhere on that road. But Laxton did not pursue the point.

"How did you manage all night?" said he.

"They had to stay in the cove," Somerfield explained. "Grenofen strained his foot going down the cliff, and the ladies couldn't get up in the dark alone."

"You don't say!"

Laxton's phrase had become a curse.

"A rather nasty experience," I observed.

"Oh, I don't know, Mr. Grenofen," said Laxton, "if either you or Miss Seabroke had been able to manage a motor-boat you could have brought her back to Blackwater. Fine night, nice girl."

The offensive devil knew I couldn't answer back.

"Miss Seabroke—" I began.

"Oh, Mr. Grenofen, don't explain."

He turned, hearing voices in the hall. We walked out together.

My mother was greeting John Merryweather, the bachelor cousin. The maid was in the act of taking from him a bag—and it was black. Fortunately John Merryweather was tall. Unfortunately he wore a beard. My mother introduced the men.

Laxton said a word of greeting and took a quick departure. I had recovered enough aplomb to walk down to the gate with Laxton.

"You hadn't seen him before, had you?" I ventured rashly.

"No," said Laxton, "unless his beard grows exceptionally fast. An revoir, Mr. Grenofen."

THROUGH THE KEYHOLE

SOMERFIELD'S discovery that Laxton was a detective was no great surprise to me.

"That's been worrying me ever since he came," I told Somerfield, although my suspicions of the man's real profession were more recent. "Then the people at the British Museum," Somerfield asked, "how—"

"Oh, that's quite easy. Laxton must have been on the watch for news of Pell. As soon as Pell's name appeared in The Times that day, when it said I was taking a ton had touch with something that was likely to happen."

"I've been wondering," Somerfield mused, "whether Laxton had any inkling of a possible shooting match and was trying to stop it. By the way, Grenofen, Laxton's not come out as a policeman yet. Why? He's still running the antiquarian stunt."

"Is he? Seen him lately?" I asked.

"Yes," said Somerfield. "This afternoon I met him coming away from Newplace—in a dirty mess, earth all over his boots and clothes. Just taking leave of Marling and the cub. Said he'd been exploring with them. He walked along with me as far as the Lord Nelson. Fact is, Grenofen, that's what made me come on to see you."

"Did he say anything about me then?" I asked.

"Yes. Asked if you were home from Hollam Bay. Whether I'd met your cousin. Whether you were specially friendly with Fotherbury. He's got his eye on you, Grenofen. But that wasn't the most remarkable thing."

"He harked back to what happened in the library the afternoon Pell was killed. Then he asked me whether I saw you or anybody else take a book out of the shelves that afternoon."

SYNOPSIS: Veronica's clever scheme to account for the night's adventure does not delude Somerfield, who tells Tom Grenofen, the next day that he knows the truth. Further, he brings the information that Professor Laxton—in reality a Scotland Yard sleuth—is on Tom's trail and is particularly anxious to recover a certain ancient book stolen from the Fotherbury library on the day of Pell's murder. They ponder on the possible connection between Pell and the Seabrokes, the puzzling crime, Laxton's peculiar actions and Somerfield's latest discovery—that Pell's murderer could not have seen his victim through the keyhole, that the fatal bullet was intended for someone else in the room and the only man sitting in a position where he could have been seen through the keyhole, was—Faron Marling.

Chapter 25

COUSIN JOHN HIMSELF

IT was Marling who should have been shot, not Pell.

Somerfield had perceived the fact during Wayne's experiments with the keyhole. Looking through when the door was closed he could see the chest by the chimney corner where Marling sat and that was all. The probable truth dawned upon him in that moment.

"Strange," said I, "that Laxton should miss it."

"How do we know he does?" asked Somerfield. "I'm pretty sure

"Yes. I think it must have been Mr. Merryweather I met on Sunday. Rather tall man, exceedingly gentlemanly but rather—indifferent to his appearance? Carrying a black bag."

I turned hot and felt as near fainting as ever in my life. I simply babbled.

"Where—how did you meet him?" I stammered.

"Oh, Sunday—on my way here. But it couldn't have been Cousin John. He didn't come till Tuesday."

"Why, of course! Must have been somebody else. Rotten luck for Mr. Merryweather, though, being ill all the time he was here, and then having to rush away. Had to go far?"

"To London," said I. "He went by the 9.40 train to Hollam Bay and caught the express."

Laxton smiled at me. It would be hard to describe all the meaning in that smile.

"You must have been back here almost as soon as I left. What time did you get home?"

The way of the liar—how stony! Somerfield came to my rescue.

"Haven't you got the news, professor?" said he. "On the way back from seeing his cousin off, he met Miss Seabroke—"

Somerfield paused and Laxton looked at me.

The "keyhole murderer" intended to kill not Pell—but Marling!

"Of course, he was after Pell." "It looked like that. But why?" "At least three people could tell a that, Grenofen."

"Yes, I know," said I. "But I won't ask Veronica. I don't think would be fair to ask Mrs. Seabroke. And if I asked old Seabroke—well, you can easily guess—"

Somerfield nodded. "It's awkward," said he. "But you know, it may have to be done. If the professor gets wise to what happened last night, he won't have any mighty compunctions about asking. Will he, now? Spritting away he man he was after for the murder of Pell! Have you realized it?"

My perception of reality was beguiled by Veronica. Somerfield, looking on from outside, was able to precipitate the confusion a little. He had an analytical mind. All these disconnections, he said, had to be linked up somehow, and the only link he could see was Laxton.

Old Fotherbury's excavations had brought Pell down to Blackwater. Then, there was a get-away by a convict. The convict arrived at Blackwater, and on his heels—Laxton.

Pell was murdered in the act of revealing a ghost and when we look for the ghost we find—Laxton. "Something in the background," said Somerfield, "between the Seabrokes, Pell and the convict. Something that even Laxton can't see, or he doesn't seem to have brought the Seabrokes into the picture yet. Therefore, whatever his knowledge, it begins later than the Seabrokes."

"No doubt about it," said I. "Laxton begins with some connection between Pell and the convict. The Seabrokes begin much further back. You remember that, immediately before Laxton came to Blackwater, he'd been in Devonshire. You remember the unexplained absence of Veronica from London that Saturday, and Pell's absence at the same time. You read that a woman and a car as well as a male accomplice were concerned in the escape. Think of Sunday night: Veronica's strange return; my encounter in Woodcot Lane; Laxton's queer conduct; Laxton's knowledge that some fellow would be prowling about Newplace that night—it all shows Lax-

"He said Fotherbury had missed a book. It was in the library Friday. Tuesday, it couldn't be found. And Mr. Fotherbury wanted it badly."

"What book?" I asked.

"An old illuminated book, with a manuscript history of the abbey. Laxton said he wouldn't be surprised if it was what had put Fotherbury on to his excavations."

"Nobody touched a book that day, so far as I remember."

"I didn't see anybody touch a book. But it's not the loss that interests me—it's the fact that Laxton's so curious about it."

"Yes, that's rather queer," I admitted.

"I'd give almost a dollar to know whether Pell was in the library on Friday and whether Marling knew he'd been there."

"Marling?"

"Well—think of Marling a minute. Hated Pell. Why? Suspected him. Thinking of Marling in the cloister Sunday night. Then Monday afternoon—you couldn't miss Marling's face when Pell went for him. It was Marling who was going to see the ghost. If you remember, if Pell had taken the book, and Marling knew it, suppose the book contained the instructions for conjuring up the ghost, Grenofen?"

"I can't see how a book in Newplace library could have anything to do with conjuring a ghost out of a convict prison," said I.

"Did it ever occur to you that Pell might have been shot by accident?" Somerfield put the question almost casually. It made me sit up.

"You mean—why, Somerfield, you can only mean one thing! That—"

"That the shot was meant for somebody else. In fact, it's perfectly clear, Grenofen. Did you look through the keyhole? A man who was going to fire through the keyhole couldn't possibly have aimed at Pell, who wasn't in the line of fire except for one instant—"

"Of course! I hadn't thought of it. The man who fired the shot was blind at the time; he couldn't fire and see the target."

"Yes, and only one man could have been shot through the keyhole—the one who sat in the direct line of fire."

"And he was—"

"Marling."

Professor Laxton is dumbfounded at the arrival of the real Cousin John.

he doesn't. Grenofen. Have you noticed that though Wayne called in Scotland Yard we don't hear anything about the Scotland Yard men? There are two of 'em staying at the Lord Nelson. But Laxton's doing all the work: they're just camouflage. You said just now Laxton began late in the story. It's Marling can take him back. And I'm just guessing whether Marling wants to. I think not."

When we had emptied our quiver of facts and theories, we came to the inevitable question: "What about it?"

My mother came into the room. "I hear Professor Laxton at the door, Tom," she said, "asking for you."

I asked to have him sent in to us.

Laxton came in genial and hearty. "Ah, Mr. Grenofen," said he, "caught you this time. How do, Mr. Somerfield? Just came to know whether I might look over any sketches you have of the Newplace diggings, Mr. Grenofen. I'm curious about the state of the opening where the fresco was found right at the eastern end of the site. I'd like to see anything you've got of it before they dug out the slab of plaster."

I must have stared the surprise I felt as Laxton pattered on, for he laughed.

The sketch-book was, of course, quite useless. Laxton made a show of studying it, asked questions, dragged out the talk interminably as it seemed to me. Among the loose leaves was one with the unfinished drawing of the touraille on the river wall.

"I seem to recognize that," he remarked. "Isn't it that little building down by the river?"

Laxton began with this question a series of double meanings which made me hot and cold by turns. It was a perfectly diabolical conversation.

"I like this," he said. "It's got such a foreign look. Don't you think?" It's a noble wall, isn't it? The old churchmen knew how to keep marauders off the premises, eh?"

Laxton looked round at me with an almost imperceptible wink as he said this. Then, turning away from the drawings, he apologized for his late call the night before.

"Sorry I wasn't home," said I.

"Oh, I'm the man who ought to apologize. Seeing off your cousin, Mr. Merryweather, weren't you? I'd hoped to meet him again."

"Again?" I said, starting back.

"She'd seen something suspicious happening to Royle's boat. Mrs. Seabroke got out her husband's car and we drove down the coast road after the boat."

"You don't say!"

"And what's more," said Somerfield, "Andy Royle got a telephone message from them this morning from Silworthy, and we ran down there and found them keeping guard over the boat."

"Extraordinary luck, you meeting Miss Seabroke, just in the nick of time!" Laxton paused. "On the way back from the station, too."

This remark dumfounded both of us. For the station was some little distance up the river beyond Blackwater Church, and it would have been truly astonishing if I had met Veronica anywhere on that road. But Laxton did not pursue the point.

"How did you manage all night?" said he.

"They had to stay in the cove," Somerfield explained. "Grenofen strained his foot going down the cliff, and the ladies couldn't get up in the dark alone."

"You don't say!"

Laxton's phrase had become a curse.

"A rather nasty experience," I observed.

"Oh, I don't know, Mr. Grenofen," said Laxton, "if either you or Miss Seabroke had been able to manage a motor-boat you could have brought her back to Blackwater. Fine night, nice girl!"

The offensive devil knew I couldn't answer back.

"Miss Seabroke—" I began.

"Oh, Mr. Grenofen, don't explain."

He turned, hearing voices in the hall. We walked out together.

My mother was greeting John Merryweather, the bachelor cousin. The maid was in the act of taking from him a bag—and it was black. Fortunately John Merryweather was tall. Unfortunately he wore a beard. My mother introduced the men.

Laxton said a word of greeting and took a quick departure. I had recovered enough aplomb to walk down to the gate with Laxton.

"You hadn't seen him before, had you?" I ventured rashly.

"No," said Laxton, "unless his beard grows exceptionally fast. Au revoir, Mr. Grenofen."

The real Cousin John gives Laxton a new puzzle. Continue the story tomorrow.

The Grand Prize for reliability in the 15-day running of the famous "Tour de France" was awarded to Essex the Challenger. perform Like a Costly Car Because Built Like a Costly Car

Essex the Challenger looks and acts like a costly car because it is built like a costly car. Its enormous success has inspired others to claim qualities "like Essex". Yet everything about it—appearance, performance, comfort and luxurious smoothness—mark it apart and altogether different.

To be like Essex without building like Essex is a goal no car has found possible. More than 200,000 owners know the outright facts. You can know them too in 30 minutes behind the wheel.

You can only find comparison for Essex qualities among costly cars, because in design and construction it stands with the practice of the fine car field.

All These "Extras" at No Extra Cost

Its good size and impressive appearance appeal to those who want comfort, distinction and good looks. Its completeness in the things which contribute to costlier car advantages, is outstanding. Comfortably Settled

It's a grand and glorious feeling, isn't it, that first day of your vacation? You settle back in your chair and realize that for the next few weeks you don't have to get up in the morning until you feel like it, keep a single business appointment, or have so much as one serious business question come up for settlement. Solid comfort, that!

SOLID comfort, this, too: When you plan your affairs so thoughtfully that, no matter what happens to you, nothing very serious, financially speaking, can happen to your family.

You can insure this relief from worry by making your will, appointing a business-like executor, and setting up a trust fund as part of the will.

In a trust fund, you know, you can direct us, as your trustee, to invest the money you leave so as to provide for the education of your sons and daughters, payments to dependents and an income for your wife as long as she lives.

Until you do this, you won't know what real comfort and peace of mind really are. So we have been told many times—by fellow townsmen of yours who have matured their plans and named us, as their executor and trustee, to carry them out.

Keeping up with Automobile Engineers has revolutionized motor fuels... Nothing but the highest quality should be used in modern motors... they are purposely built for greater power and speed... Higher compression demands a fuel of the highest quality and efficiency...

Gulf No-Nox Motor Fuel has kept up with these demands and is now AVIATION GRADE.

It may be procured from any Gulf Dealer either for the plane or the car... It stops knocks and silences the pings and clicks so prevalent in the new cars... The Orange color is for identification only... it has no effect on NO-NOX efficiency... NO-NOX is a pure petroleum product... no dope.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO
Federal Republican Delegate
Meeting: At a meeting of the Federal Republican delegates from different townships, held at the Court House in Gettysburg, on Monday, the 7th inst., Robert M. Thenny, Sen., was appointed Chairman, and Samuel B. Wright, Sec'y.

The following delegates attended: Borough—John Houck, John B. M'Pherson, Menallen—Samuel B. Wright, Mount Pleasant—Herman Houghton, Wm. G. Galt, Straban—Robert M. Thenny, Sen., John Felty.

Reading—David White. The following Text was agreed upon and recommended to the support of the Federalists of Adams county.

Assembly—James M. Sherry, John F. MacFarlane, Commissioner—Henry Myers (Tyron).

Auditor—Samuel Fahnestock. Director of the Poor—Robert M. Thenny, Sen.

Two of the resolutions adopted were as follows: Resolved, That we assembled as Federalists disapprove of the violent resolutions adopted by the late anti-Masonic meeting, as being proscriptive and anti-republican in their tendency, and even more intended to injure the Federal cause in this County.

Resolved, That we disapprove of the excitement, which has been carried to such an extent against Free-Masons of this county.

Died. On Thursday morning last, Mr. Robert A. Baker, of Wrentham township, in the 71st year of age.

On Monday last, Mrs. Elizabeth Sweney, widow of Mr. James Sweney, deceased, of Cumberland township, in the 56th years of her age.

(Communicated) Anti-Masonic Meeting: A large and respectable meeting of the citizens of Adams county, opposed to Secret Societies, assembled at the Court House in Gettysburg, the meeting was organized by appointing John Brinkerhoff, Esq., President, Samuel Withrow and John Shull, Vice Presidents, and Doct. C. Smith and B. Smith, Secretaries.

After some introductory remarks, it was Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to draft Resolutions, and report them to the meeting.

The following persons were appointed members of said Committee—T. Stevens, Esq., John Kerr, John Dickson, Esq., David Deibel and James Robinson, who reported Resolutions which were adopted.

Resolved—1. That we believe the Masonic Institutions with its orders of Nobility, its Titles and its Grades to be inconsistent with Republican equality and a spirit of free government.

2. That the exclusive and selfish principles of their association give an undue influence and advantage to the members of the Fraternity, over the great mass of their fellow-citizens.

3. That we hereby invite, and in the spirit of friendship beseech the Free Masons of Adams County to surrender their charter through with their fellow citizens and become like other men; and we pledge ourselves, as soon as they shall have done so, to withdraw our opposition to the Masons within this county.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEWS ADAMS

SALT LAKE CITY

I CROSSED the great Salt Lake today—a lake that is over 30 miles across by rail—the road that the late E. M. Harriman brought about after those closest to him said "it couldn't be done!"

This is the saltiest lake in the world. About one-third of it is salt. For miles before you get to the lake, you see the desert sand covered with an overflow of this water, and under the sun it looks like a blanket of snow, or a spread of tiny diamonds.

After Brigham Young and his followers had come thousands of miles across the plains and through dangerous mountain passes, they arrived here—and at once exclaimed: "This is the place!" And so they settled and built this beautiful city. Its streets are the widest of any city in America, perhaps in the world. There is no traffic problem here.

As I look out from the window where I now write, I see the ornate and stately Mormon temple, and auditorium that houses one of the most musical organs in the world. The auditorium was built without the aid of a single nail!

Beyond, looking toward the Salt Lake, you see a beautiful range of mountains, in fact they hold the city within its arms. Into the sides of these mountains are located giant copper mines that help to give copper to the world. And in the valleys that are so fertile, you will see the foot-prints of profitable harvests.

One year, many years ago, the crickets came to this lovely place and it looked as though they were going to destroy everything. Then a flock of sea gulls suddenly descended and destroyed the pests. Today you will see in the public square a monument to this bird which the Mormons believe was sent by the Lord in answer to their prayers.

But one reason why I always love to be in this city is to watch the sunsets from my window in the Hotel Utah. As the sun lowers you see glistening strips of gold running across the lake, and there is a play of clouds amongst the blues and golds that makes you think of pictures of "The Eternal City."

Just Folks

ENOUGH

'Tis enough for the day
If you're merry and gay,
Don't bother your head about money.

Be glad you've the chance,
And the Strength for the dance,
Be glad that your holiday's sunny.

If it's health you possess,
You've the seed of success,
If you're free from a trouble or sorrow,

Just jump in and play
And put fretting away,
And let whimpering wait till to-morrow.

Though your garden is small
If it's blooming at all,
And you've conquered the insects attacking;

If your appetite's good,
And your fireplace has wood,
Don't think about things that are lacking.

For you can't have it all
On this old earthly ball,
Time forever is taking and giving.

If you're healthy and a friend
And a free day to spend,
Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Rejoice and be glad you are living.

Little Jack Rabbit

By David Cory

Little Jack Rabbit is fast asleep;
Over the skies the pretty stars creep;
Below in the meadow the clover tops
Are nodding away at the lolly-pops.

Yes, 'all was quiet and peaceful at the dear Old Bramble Patch.
But the stars kept on winking and blinking, and Willie Wind kept on stirring the grasses so that no one was disturbed, until all of a sudden,

just like that, quick as a wind that blows off your hat, the tiny cuckoo hopped out on the front porch of her little clock house on the wall and shouted:

"It's six o'clock and Merry Sun
Is hiding behind a tree;
He wonders what has happened to Make you sleep so heavily."

"There! it's six o'clock," exclaimed Lady Love, the little rabbit's pretty bunny mother, "What has made us sleep so late today?"

"Never mind, mother dear," cried her good little bunny son, "I'll bring in the kindling wood quick-erly quick and build the fire just like I did last night."

"I'll bring in the kindling wood quick-erly quick and build the fire just like I did last night."

"I'll bring in the kindling wood quick-erly quick and build the fire just like I did last night."

"I'll bring in the kindling wood quick-erly quick and build the fire just like I did last night."

From her tiny wooden seat, went on the poetical old gentleman bunny, and in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

"Whenever you wish your photo taken,
Come to me at my Cozy Nook.
The latch hangs out on my office door;
Just swing it in with your good right paw.
You've done me a favor today, I'll say,
That I'll never be able to half repay."

cried the old photographer bird, as the brave policeman Dog handcuffed Old Man Weasel, who, you remember in the last story, had nearly made an end to poor Photographer Crane.

"I'll bring my little bow wows down when next I go to Turnip Town. I'd like to have their pictures taken while they are eating eggs and bacon."

barked the good protector of law and order in Rabbitland. Then off he led Old Man Weasel to the Jail Hotel in Rabbitville, where he locked him up in Cell 23 for a week and a day and maybe three.

"Well, now I had better hurry on to the dear Old Bramble Patch," murmured Photographer Crane, once more shouldering his bag camera. "Gracious me, nothing but delays today. I was provoked at being held-up by the Big Brown Bear, who insisted on having his picture taken, although I told him I was in a hurry to photograph Little Jack. Then Professor Jim Crow wouldn't take no for an answer when I politely explained I had no time to take a picture of his son Blackie. I might have arrived at the Old Bramble Patch in spite of these two delays if this dreadful Weasel hadn't come upon me. Well, all's well that ends well," and with a sigh, away trotted the long-legged bird.

By and by, after a while, and maybe a mile, and a wrinkled old smile, He came to the stile.
That served for a gate at the Clover Estate.

As he hurried down the Old Cow path, he saw Lady Love, the little rabbit's mother, standing with her bunny son, just outside the bramble bushes.

The Old Crane, as he set up his big camera on its three long slender yellow legs, although why he asked them to smile when the faces of both little bunnies were nothing but puzzles to me. I guess it must be.

"Have you polished the doorknob clean and bright,
And brought in the kindling wood?
I think I hear the canary bird Asking for breakfast food."

observed the old gentleman rabbit with a smile as his small bunny nephew hopped up the parrot path through the bushes, his hand-sack bouncing up and down on his back and his red shirt collar sticking out.

"Dear, old dear," said the truthful little bunny, "I forgot all about our little yellow bird. But I filled the woodbox and polished the front doorknob."

"Bring me the water pot," said Uncle Lucky. "The power bed seems pretty dry. I'll attend to that while you see to Miss Canary."

In her feather dress of yellow.
And she sings so clear and sweet."

Don't you move, my bunny man,

Has the laxative in your home a family doctor's approval?

MOST of us value our health too much to purposely neglect ourselves when we are warned of constipation by bad breath, feverishness, biliousness, a headache, lack of appetite, or that weak, helpless feeling. The continuation of our trouble is more often due to the things we do rather than the things we leave undone.

Some things people do to help the bowels really weaken these organs. Only a doctor knows what things will cleanse the system without harm. That's why the laxative in your home should have a family doctor's approval.

A wonderful product now known to millions of people as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a family doctor's prescription for sluggish bowels. It never varies from the original prescription which Dr. Caldwell wrote thousands of times in his many years of practice at Monticello, Illinois. He proved it safe and reliable for women and children; thoroughly effective for the most robust men. He showed it actually corrects constipation. It is made from fresh herbs and other pure ingredients.

Since Dr. Caldwell first permitted his prescription to be put up in bottles and sold through drug stores, it has increased steadily in popularity until today it is the largest selling laxative in the world!

A WASHINGTON DAYBOOK

By Herbert Plummer
Washington—The scholarship of the Herbert Hoovers has won recognition in its own right in one of the world's greatest libraries—the Library of Congress.

In a glass case in the library's exhibition rooms there has been deposited a copy of "De Re Metallica," written by Agricola in Latin in 1556 and translated in 1912 by Herbert Hoover and Lou Henry Hoover as "a labor of love." It is in full view of the thousands who visit the library from all sections of the world.

Library guides are authority for the statement that few visitors fail to inspect the book. It is one of the most popular of the many exhibitions or rare literature housed there.

President and Mrs. Hoover personally presented a copy of "De Re Metallica" to the Library of Congress.

Red Tape
The working copy of the volume translated by the Hoovers is in the library section of rare editions.

One desiring to inspect the volume at close hand must take an elevator and ascend to level 37—at the top of the building. Here he enters a steel wire enclosure escorted by an attendant. His name, home address, Washington address, and the field of research he is engaged in is entered in a large book.

Then he is presented a form on which must be filled out the name of the book, the reader's home and local address, and field of research. The book is brought to a table. Before one is permitted to leave, the book must be returned to the desk, and a receipt is given the one who has handled the volume.

The working copy of "De Re Metallica" contains 637 pages. Its size is 18 1/2 by 14 inches and it is bound in red. Footnotes in the text inserted by President Hoover are copious. After three-quarters of a page is required.

Five Years For It
Excerpts from the preface of the translation are interesting:

"We do not present 'De Re Metallica' as a work of 'practical value' to those interested in the history of their own profession we need make no apologies, except for the long delay in publication. As the book could be but a labor of love, it has had to find the moments of its execution in night hours, weekends, and holidays, in all extending over a period of five years."

At the time the Hoovers published the book it was thought that it would be of interest to no one outside the engineering profession. But neither was it thought at that time that Herbert Hoover some day would be President of the United States.

With Hoover's election came a great demand for "De Re Metallica." Those who probably never would look inside the book seriously wanted to have a copy nevertheless.

Book dealers were swamped with orders. There were only a limited number of copies, for the book
